The Castle was not a finished piece and Kafka did not want it published. He abandoned the manuscript somewhere in the middle stating that he "had lost his way". This book is an unfinished novel—as Max Brod, Kafka's literary executor, observed, Kafka intended that K. should die exhausted by his futile efforts to gain access to and acceptance from the elusive, local authorities but that on his deathbed his character was finally to receive a permit to stay in the village—and it stands as testament to the Kafka's achievements that its unfinished state is in no way detrimental to its effectiveness.
