From Dictatorship to Democracy Quotes by Gene Sharp

A more common way that a democracy becomes a dictatorship happens when a large portion of the population becomes overly religious. As religion’s power and focus grows in a country, people may begin applying pressure to give religious heads a seat in government. While this route, there's no guarantee that a dictatorship will form.

How Do Democracies Become Dictatorships?

The Democracy-Dictatorship Index has the main regime types of "democracy" and "dictatorship" and three sub-types for each as well. Democracies can be either parliamentary, semi-presidential, or presidential and dictatorships can be civilian, military, or royal. Many countries which are seen as otherwise democratic are dictatorships because there has yet to be an alternation in power since their incumbent government has never lost an election.
