GTD and OmniFocus 2 - my productivity workflow. Published on the 17 June 2014 and tagged productivity, gtd, omnifocus. I work from home running my own business, I've been running a business since 2001 - we did have an office for a few years but once we stopped taking on client projects to focus on Perch full-time, the office made little sense.

GTD and OmniFocus 2 - my productivity workflow

OmniFocus is a powerful tool designed to follow David Allen's Getting Things Done. I go into the details of GTD here but the simple version is that it's a method of getting things out of your mind and into a trusted organizational system. The main purpose is to free up your mind to have ideas, not hold them. There is an updated version of my OmniFocus setup and the inspiration behind it ...

My Omnifocus Setup and Workflow

In OmniFocus 2, contexts were a main metadata flag available for projects and tasks. Every project or task could be assigned with exactly one context. Contexts have had many approaches from different users. If going strictly GTD, a context would be something like @Phone or @Computer, a thing which needs to be available for something to work on.
