Being Jewish can be defined in terms of religion, race, culture, and nationality. Any one (or more) of the varied definitions may apply to a given individual, but all of them are not true of all Jews. To speak of being Jewish religiously means that one follows the Torah and/or the Mishnah. There are many who do not follow the tenets of Judaism but who consider themselves cultural Jews, since they observe certain festivals or traditions, albeit in a non-religious way.
