Epistemology - Epistemology - Scientific theology to secular science: For most of the Middle Ages there was no distinction between theology and science (scientia). Science was knowledge that was deduced from self-evident principles, and theology was knowledge that received its principles from God, the source of all principles. By the 14th century, however, scientific and theological thinking ...

So I think we need a priori logical principles. Once we have them, it is a small step to a priori probabilistic principles e.g. if you've seen a million black ravens, then the next raven is probably black. These were the principles Carnap tried to develop in his later life, so I think he recognized the limitations of his early view.

Epistemology, Probable Belief and Carnap - 3:16

Constructionist epistemology rejects the idea that objective 'truth' exists and is waiting to be discovered. Instead, 'truth', or meaning, arises in and out of our engagement with the realities in our world. That is, a 'real world' does not preexist independently of human activity or symbolic language.
