is an area of economics in which a wide variety of economic approaches ranging from the neoclassical to the marxist are used to examine the political economy of the peasantry. The defining feature of the peasants are that they are typically seen to be only partly integrated into the market economy - an economy which, in societies with a significant peasant population, is typically found to have many imperfect, incomplete or missing markets.

Sahlins drew on Chayanov in his theory of the domestic mode of production, but later authors have argued that Chayanov's use of neo-classical economics supports a formalist position.

Alexander Chayanov - Wikipedia

The prominent theoretical model of the economics of peasant households is that advanced by A. V. Chayanov, in works from about 1910 to 1930, based on extensive survey data of Russian peasants (1, 2). He intended his theories to be applicable to cultivators who do not hire labor and are part of a partially monetized economy; thus, the theories should be relevant to most peasant cultivators since ...
